The lord lieutenant, replying to an address of the Dublin corporation, said he feared, notwithstanding the desire of the bulk of the people of the country that the perpetrators of the murders be brought to justice, that some persons, actuated by fear or sympathy, were keeping back information that might lead to the discovery of the criminals. The responsibility of administering exceptional powers was very heavy, but it was his duty not to flinch from the task. He appealed for aid from all loyal citizens. The powers would not be used citizens. The powers would not be used against them, but against secret societies.

NEW YORK, May 19.—A companion story to that which appears to-day in the Freeman's Journal, of Dublin, is printed in an evening paper here. The story is that the murder of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke was the or Lord Cavendiso and Mr. Burke was the work of a secret organization, composed partly of Irishmen, partly of French and partly of Italians. One of the murderers is an Italian and another Irish. Both are well an Italian and another Irish. Both are well educated and in comparatively good circumstances. It is accorted that Rurke had seduced a lady who was betrothed to the man who assassinated him. The intimacy was of two months duration. but received no answer. He tried the door but it would not open. It was finally forced, and a most horrible sight was before those who entered. The body of a man was found on the bed greatly decomposed. He was dressed in two shirts and a pair of drawers. and with much show of reason, that the peo-ple of Ireland are in favor of home rule, it is not a little remarkable that no public bodies found on a table by the bed empty. This ple of Ireland are in favor of home rule, it is not a little remarkable that to public bodies take action, by petition or otherwise, for that end. The synod of Roman Catholic prelates, the Board of Trinity College, Dublin, the Catholic University, the learned Society of the King's Inn (the great "Inn of Court" of Dublin), the Royal College of Surgeons, the Royal College of Physicians, the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland, the corporations (that of Dublin has the almost unique privilege of presenting petitions in person), the chambers of commerce—in a word, all the great representative associations of the country make no sign in support person), the chambers of commerce—in a word, all the great representative associations of the country make no sign in support of a measure which it is so vehemently asserted lies nearest to the hearts of the people. And further, not a single peer, Protestant or Catholic, not a single man of distinguished family, save Mr. Parnell, expresses publicly a desire for home rule, while but twenty per cent. of Ireland's representatives in the House of Commons voted against the Coercion act. Can it, then, be wondered at if England hesitates to grant home rule? What a contrast does this present to English popular movements. In 1640 the men who risked all for what they deemed right were men who had everything to lose, probably satisfied the chaincermans that no one was in the room. Young was a man of more than thirty years, and his hight was five feet eight inches. His suit of clothes, found on a chair, were neat, and indicated a well-to-do man.
